

TOBY

You want a beer?

MARCUS

Sure. Now I'm not on duty no more. Thanks. Nice out here in this breeze, huh? Now that it's cooled down. How'd you do it? Ahh, never mind. I'll figure that out in time. Why? Why did you do it? I know why your brother Tanner did it. He robbed them little banks because he liked it. He shot my partner 300 yards away because he liked it. Made him feel good. If I hadn't blown his shit for brains out, there'd be a new pickup truck out front with jet skis and whatever else he could think to buy. He'd spend it all just to give him an excuse to steal some more. But not you. There's nothing to do around here except them pump jacks. Each one of them making you more a month than what you and your brother stole from all four banks combined. Help me understand that. Help me understand why four people died so you could steal money it don't seem you spent and don't seem you need.

TOBY

You have a family?

MARCUS

My partner had a family. A big one. They ain't got no pump jacks in their backyard.

TOBY

I didn't kill your friend.

MARCUS

Yes you did. By setting this thing in motion. You expect me to believe your dimwitted brother planned this? Oh no, this was smart. This was you.

TOBY

I've been poor my whole life. So were my parents and their parents before them. It's like a disease. Passing from one generation to another. That's what it is. It affects every person you know. But not my boys. Not anymore. This is theirs's now. Now I never killed no one in my life but if you want me to start with you, let's get on with it, old man. See if you can grab that pistol before I blast you off this porch.

Hey. I'm renting a little house in town. You want to stop by and finish this conversation, your welcome anytime.

MARCUS

I'd like that. I'll be seeing you.

TOBY

Yeah. Soon I hope. Ready to be done with this.

MARCUS

You'll never be done with it no matter what. It's gonna haunt you, son, for the rest of your days. But you won't be alone. It's gonna haunt me, too.

TOBY

If you stop by, maybe I'll give you peace.

MARCUS

Yeah, maybe. Maybe I'll give it to you.