PABLO

Can I Get you something to drink?

EDUARDO

I don't want anything

PABLO

Look, don't be nervous. As soon as you have the president on the phone, you will make it clear that if he doesn't remove the troops surrounding the prison immediately, there will be grave consequences. But if he withdraws the troops we'll stay here quietly and complete our sentence.

Pablo hands him the phone. Eduardo calls the president and talks on the phone.

EDUARDO

It's Eduardo, vice minister of justice. I need to talk to the president... how long will I be here as a hostage?

PABLO

You are not my hostage. You are my guest.

The president hangs up the phone

EDUARDO

They hung up.

PABLO

So, then... the president is too busy to talk to me.

Beat.

PABLO

I just realized something. The president didn't just betray me, he also betrayed you. He knew if you came here... look at me... there would be three options. One: I would leave with you peacefully. Two: I take you hostage. Three: I shoot you, and then he would have a good excuse to kill me. Right? Either way, he wins. Right?

EDUARDO

Maybe the president is betraying us both. You could be right. But you know something? I'll sacrifice my life to make sure you're dead.

PABLO

You think you're better than me, but you're wrong. I come from nothing. I fought hard to become what I am. If the Government hadn't come after me I would be where you are now... the vice minister of justice.

EDUARDO

You and I are nothing alike. You are a criminal. And criminals can't run forever.

One of Pablo's man comes to tell Pablo something

MAN

Sir...

Whispers something in Pablo's ear.

PABLO

Your friend Gaviria has ordered Special Forces to raid the prison while you're still inside.

EDUARDO

I would've done the same thing.

PABLO

Dont kill him. If he dies... It will be in the hands of his own government. Good luck, vice minister.
