

THE UNDOING

Season One, Episode 4

Grace & Haley

INT. LAWYER'S OFFICE - DAY

HALEY listens to GRACE.

GRACE

I was on one of my walks.

HALEY

One of your walks.

GRACE

Yes. One of my walks. That's what I do. That's how I ground myself. I walk. Is that really so difficult to comprehend?

HALEY

That you happened to ground yourself by walking within footsteps of your husband's bludgeoned-to-death lover. Yeah, it bumps me. I'm not saying it's bad. Perhaps I could suggest that you killed her? Did you?

GRACE

Are you making a joke?

HALEY

I don't make jokes. I'm not funny. Luckily for you, not Jonathan... the police have more images of you grounding yourself, walking, after the time of death. You're no longer on their radar as a suspect. But they still think you're withholding.

GRACE

Why?

HALEY

Because it's what rich, entitled people do when threatened. They conceal the ugly truths, to protect themselves, their family units, their places in society. Their public image. And they think they can get away with it, because they're rich.

GRACE

I'm not withholding.

HALEY

Whether you are or not... Eyes here, please. Don't do it with me. Ever. Anything else? Apart from your grounding walkabout. Any more secrets?

GRACE

No.

HALEY

Tell me more about Elena's husband. You said that he struck you as volatile.

GRACE

Very.

HALEY

How very?

GRACE

Just... very.

HALEY

That's not terribly specific. Are we talking about something more than that? Come on. Give it the old trained clinical psychologist try.

GRACE

Why are you testing me?

HALEY

Because this case may come down to you. And before I put you on the stand, I have to kick the tires.

GRACE

On the stand? No. No. I'm not going on the stand.
